Job Outlook

Employment of social workers is expected to increase faster than the average for all occupations through 2010. The elderly population is increasing rapidly, creating greater demand for health and social services, resulting in particularly rapid job growth among gerontology social workers. Social workers also will be needed to help the large baby-boom generation deal with depression and mental health concerns stemming from mid-life, career, or other personal and professional difficulties. In addition, continuing concern about crime, juvenile delinquency, and services for the mentally ill, the mentally retarded, the physically disabled, AIDS patients, and individuals and families in crisis will spur demand for social workers.

Earnings

Median annual earnings of child, family, and school social workers were $31,470 in 2000. The middle 50 percent earned between $24,910 and $40,170. Median earnings for medical and public health social workers were $34,790 in 2000. The middle 50 percent earned between $27,800 and $43,450. Median earnings for mental health and substance abuse social workers were $30,170 in 2000. The middle 50 percent earned between $23,840 and $39,190.

Social workers help people deal with a wide range of problems. They help individuals and families cope with mental illness and problems such as inadequate housing, unemployment, lack of job skills, financial mismanagement, serious illness, disability, substance abuse, unwanted pregnancy or antisocial behavior. They also work with families who have serious conflicts, including those involving child or spousal abuse. Through direct counseling, social workers help clients identify their concerns, consider solutions and find resources. Often, social workers provide concrete information such as where to go for debt counseling, how to find child care or elder care, how to apply for public assistance or other benefits or how to get an alcoholic or drug addict admitted to a rehabilitation program. Social workers may also arrange for services in consultation with clients and then follow through to assure the services are helpful.

Most social workers specialize in a clinical field such as child welfare and family services, mental health or school social work. Clinical social workers offer psychotherapy or counseling and a range of services in public agencies, in clinics and in private practice. Other types of social workers are: Social workers in child welfare or family services may counsel parents on how to care for disabled children or to arrange for services during a family member's illness; in child or adult protective services they investigate reports of abuse; in mental health they provide group therapy, outreach services, intervention and rehabilitation; in health care they help patients and families cope with the affects of chronic, acute or terminal illness; in schools they diagnose problems with children and counsel children and help the disabled to be accommodated; in criminal justice they make recommendations and provide services for inmates and families; in occupational social work they work within a corporation's personnel or health unit; and yet others focus on the needs of the elderly.

We offer many of the programs, sports, and activities available at large four-year universities and colleges. But, students will not have to stand in line behind juniors and seniors in the classroom, on the playing field, or in leadership positions. Students can immediately act in a play, sing in a musical group, serve as editor for the college newspaper, plan social activities, compete on the playing field, or set policy as a student government member.

In addition to providing a great education for those who enter college with aspirations of a degree, LCCC helps those who have changed their career goals, who want to broaden their horizons, and who want to return to work. LCCC provides learning and training for those who want to move up but find they need new or improved skills for the kind of professional opportunities they seek.

LCCC faculty is recognized locally and nationally for their work as professors and in other areas. They all have advanced degrees and real-world experience and understand their primary responsibility at LCCC is to teach classes. Classes are small. Individual attention is plentiful.
